Why study history? Because it is a vital way to understand the world we live in and how it came to be. Historians explore the past, in all its diversity and complexity, by looking at cause and effect, investigating change, and examining human agency.

History is far from being just about memorizing “names and dates.” The 21st century is a complicated place. Change comes fast and happens continually. The skills and tools we use in studying the past can also help us to make sense of our rapidly changing world and to find our place within it. Knowing our history is about knowing ourselves!

Studying History also gives students the tools they need to succeed in the future. An education in history promises an array of versatile and valuable skills that employers in many fields are looking for. History students at Wayne State conduct exciting research in archives, in Detroit and across the world. They learn to evaluate and interpret evidence, think critically, and communicate clearly and persuasively. They have opportunities to intern at museums and archives and to showcase their research at conferences and in public exhibits. They work with our department’s award-winning faculty, who bring their cutting-edge scholarship on race, gender, economics, labor, colonialism, citizenship, culture, science, family networks, the environment, and so much more into the classroom. Many students pair their History education with double-majors and minors in a range of other disciplines such as anthropology, biological sciences, English, and political science. That interdisciplinary grounding combined with critical analysis, which lies at the heart of historical inquiry, prepares students for a host of different careers.

History at Wayne State opens doors! Our alumni have put their talents and skills to use in a range of professions, including in business, education, museums, public policy, intelligence, the nonprofit sector, publishing, and tourism. A history degree also provides a strong foundation for graduate work in the social sciences and humanities, and for professional programs in law and medicine.

Why study history? Because it is a vehicle for understanding the present, making the world a better place, and acquiring valuable skills that translate directly to successful and rewarding careers. Those are not the only reasons, though; studying history is fun, intellectually stimulating, and always rewarding!

History is facts and dates, but it's also much more than that. History is produced by historians who marshal evidence to tell stories about those who came before us and make arguments about the past. We work with an ever-growing range of sources – from material culture and popular culture to archival documents and beyond. We think historically. In the process, we attempt to reconstruct and understand the decisions that individuals made and the consequences of those decisions – what happened and why/how does it matter? These are questions about both the past and the present. The sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in English history are often looked upon as a cultural "golden age"—the days of King Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth, William Shakespeare, Francis Drake, Walter Raleigh, Isaac Newton, and other larger-than-life figures. In fact, for those living through this "early modern period," it was also a time of great uncertainty, upheaval, and even violence. This class will explore the key events, issues, and personalities of this tumultuous era. We will focus in particular on the Protestant Reformation, and on the clash between the monarchy and Parliament over how much power a king should command. We'll also examine the lives of everyday Englishmen and women, the age of exploration and colonization in the New World, and important cultural developments such as the rise of Shakespearean theater and the Scientific Revolution.
